Suggestions which would improve the quality of the paper but are not essential for publication:

- 1- The paper clearly indicates the hard work of the authors. I appreciate the authors for the hard work.
- 2- Make sure to explain all of the tables and graphs/chart you include. You did not do that thoroughly here.
- 3- I recommend making Fig. 1,3 has a good quality with high resolution (increase figure font).
- 4- The manuscript is poorly written. It is full of incomplete & meaningless sentences. I really find it difficult to understand the manuscript. Authors really need to improve their written communications skills in English.
- 5- Conclusions should address whether or not they achieved the objective of the study.
- 6- Where is the discussion section to interpret the work of this review paper?
- 7- Don't use "we", "our" on the text. It is better to change such sentences to the passive voice.

Suggestions which would improve the quality of the paper but are not essential for publication:

The overall structure is good and clearly included the background of the study, objectives of the study, methodology used, major findings, and the conclusion. Also, the authors included latest research studies in the paper.

Changes which must be made before publication:

- 1- Conclusion: Do not include the methods and findings in this section. Rewrite this.
- 2- Replace the word 'paper' with 'study'.
- 3- Include the source (Reference) when equations from other published works are mentioned.

NOTIF: Please send an email to the editor to acknowledge the reception of this email notification. The editor needs to make sure that messages reach the authors and don't delay the review process.

17. Exploring factors influencing actual usage of freight forwarding services in Indonesia: A study on desire, outcome expectations, perceived self-efficacy and moderating roles of delivery risk and perceived trust Pages: 179-192
Mtiah Said, Lukman Setiawan, Darmono, Andi Yusran Paris, Sultan and Mochammad Fahlevi PDF (416 K)

Abstract: This study investigates the factors influencing the actual usage of freight forwarding services in Indonesia, focusing on the roles of desire, outcome expectancy, and perceived self-efficacy, with delivery risk and perceived trust acting as moderating factors. Grounded in Social Cognitive Theory (SCT), this study examines how personal cognitive factors and external risks influence users' attitudes and behaviors toward freight forwarding services. Data were collected from 616 respondents across Jakarta, Surabaya, and Makassar utilizing a structured questionnaire. Partial Least Squares Structural Equation Modeling (PLS-SEM) was employed to test the hypothesized relationships. The findings reveal that desire significantly influences both attitude and delivery risk, while attitude has a strong direct effect on actual usage. Outcome expectancy and perceived self-efficacy demonstrated weaker effects, particularly on attitudes, suggesting that other factors, such as trust and risk perceptions, play a more significant role in this context. Additionally, delivery risk was found to moderate the relationship between desire and attitude, while perceived trust did not moderate the link between attitude and actual usage. The research underscores the importance of trust-building and risk mitigation strategies for freight forwarding service providers in Indonesia. The study also provides theoretical contributions by applying SCT to the logistics sector and offers practical implications for enhancing service adoption in emerging markets.

Abstract
As cybersecurity threats evolve alarmingly, conventional defense strategies are becoming increasingly ineffective. In response to this urgent challenge, our study presents a transformative approach to red-teaming exercises by integrating the MITRE ATT&CK framework. This innovative integration leverages real-world attacker tactics and behaviors to create highly realistic scenarios that rigorously test defenses and uncover

ABSTRACT. Electronic drug prescriptions, also known as digital drug prescriptions, have been widely adopted in numerous countries. However, this app has both positive and negative implications. The utilization of electronic drug prescriptions has been associated with a range of significant problems, including security concerns, privacy breaches, data manipulation, and even fatalities among patients. The following article provides a summary of the research's background. An extensive investigation was conducted pertaining to the utilization of Blockchain technology, which is widely regarded as a potential remedy for the issue of electronic drug prescriptions. The present study employs a qualitative approach, specifically utilizing a systematic literature review methodology. The findings of this study demonstrate that the research topic under investigation remains a subject of ongoing interest and holds potential for future advancements. The research noticed a twelfold increase from 2015 to 2022, with ongoing growth in 2023. This study identified 13 significant developmental factors that impact the Cultural Safety Sociotechnical Framework (CSSF). Based on the findings, it can be inferred that the implementation of blockchain technology has the potential to enhance patient safety and security. By integrating blockchain technology, the CSSF will possess a repository of data that exhibits qualities of reliability, transparency, and speed due to its decentralized nature. Moreover, the information stored on the blockchain is deemed accurate and resistant to tampering, establishing trust among clients. This trust is further reinforced by the blockchain's provenance capabilities, ensuring the authenticity and traceability of the data. Additionally, the utilization of blockchain technology ensures the safety and privacy of the information stored within the system. However, it is imperative to establish a novel governance framework for the digital prescription issuance process in order to fully take advantage and utilize the potential of blockchain technology. The findings of this study show significant value for the healthcare sector and scientific advancement, particularly in relation to the utilization of blockchain technology.

ABSTRACT

Article history: Received May 15, 2024 Received in revised format May 23, 2024 Accepted July 15 2024 Available online July 15 2024 Keywords: Foreign Direct Investment Access Relaxation Trans-regional Indonesia enterprises	This study examines the impact of relaxation of Foreign Direct Investment (FDI) access on the trans-regional investment behavior of Indonesian enterprises. Utilizing data from publicly listed companies between 2010 and 2022, this study investigates how easing FDI restrictions influences the geographic distribution of subsidiaries. The findings indicate that FDI access relaxation significantly promotes trans-regional investment, driven by reduced government subsidies and lower market intervention. These mechanisms enable enterprises to expand beyond local markets by decreasing their dependency on government support and lowering their transaction costs. Robustness tests, including first-order difference models and dynamic distribution tests, confirmed the reliability of the results. This study suggests that a further reduction in FDI restrictions can enhance domestic market integration, mitigate capital market segmentation, and promote inclusive economic growth. This study contributes to the literature by providing empirical evidence of the economic benefits of FDI access policies and offers new strategies for addressing market segmentation in Indonesia.

1. Introduction

In recent years, global trade protectionism has increased, leading to increased uncertainty in the international trade environment. Countries have begun to explore the potential of their domestic markets to mitigate the adverse effects of external market instability on their economic development. For instance, India has implemented the "Make in India" initiative to encourage the development of domestic manufacturing; European countries such as France and Italy have implemented protectionist measures for domestic food and agricultural products; and the Brazilian government has provided tax incentives and trade protection to encourage the production of domestic products by local companies, reducing reliance on imported products. In the process of promoting effective circulation within domestic markets, the segmentation of domestic capital markets poses a key obstacle.

Capital market segmentation refers to the inability of capital to flow freely and efficiently across regions within a country owing to various barriers, thus causing the capital markets in different regions to be isolated from each other, specifically manifested by a low level of trans-regional investment (Young, 2000). Capital market segmentation is a widespread issue faced by many countries worldwide (Carvache-Franco et al., 2023). In Indonesia, capital market segmentation is particularly severe (Anggraini et al., 2022). Fiscal decentralization in Indonesia formally began with the enactment of the Law on Regional Autonomy (Law No. 22/1999) and the Law on Fiscal Balance between the Central Government and the Regions (Law No. 25/1999). These laws were part of a broader reform agenda following the end of President Suharto's regime in 1998. The
